leaves stay green; in the year of drought it shows no distress, but still bears fruit.”*

“The Sermon of the Beatitudes”

James Tissot. 1836-1902

Does God give you confidence? An interesting question. Sometimes confidence comes from having knowledge, ability and experience. Other times, confidence can be a result of what a person has. Material goods and financial resources can help a person feel secure and capable. Relationships are also a source of confidence. The love of family and friends are important sources of self-assurance as well as the esteem and respect of colleagues.

These sources of confidence - ability, material resources and relationships - can radically change over a lifetime. They fluctuate in levels of abundance in a person's life and can be a source of confidence for good and healthy reasons. They also can create a false confidence and foment the sins of pride, presumption, vanity and lack of charity for others.

Our reading from Jeremiah uses the image of a tree planted near a stream to illustrate how God is the source of our well-being and self-assurance. Regardless of the season, the tree is always green because it draws water from the stream. Jeremiah reminds us to place our trust in God. The seasons in our lives change. But the truth and love of God does not. He often chooses to express his love for us through the people in our lives. Yet he remains the source of truth, love and life.

This does not mean rejecting the daily concerns of life. God draws us to himself through the experience of living life. Through a life shared with God, we are taught by him how to discern the true call to confidence in him from the temptations to place our trust and confidence in men and earthly living.

This is the faith that we speak of when we talk about the holy men and women of the Church. The saints were deeply rooted in God's truth and love. They knew their greatest sense of confidence, self-worth, peace and happiness came from knowing God to be the source of their life.

Last week, the Dominicans spent time in Homer for community days. The weather seemed to change every 15 minutes with snow, wind, clouds, sun and fog. It provided a dramatic and beautiful view of Kachemak Bay and the surrounding mountains. We enjoyed getting some rest, meals and recreation. Each day we celebrated Mass at St. John the Baptist parish. This week Fr. Andy is away on home visit in California. Fr. Dismas is serving in Fairbanks until Sunday afternoon.

In Christ, Fr. Steve Maekawa, OP - Pastor
